Carrots

Here are real baby carrots! Wish that we had bigger carrots for you, but these seemed to have stopped growing, so we share with you what we have...Enjoy!

Tomatoes

No frost yet, but the plants are beginning their decline. Most of the leaves are dead, and there are fewer fruits left. As long as we don't have a frost you should still get a few tomatoes each week, but there is not the abundance we had a couple of weeks ago....However, we feel lucky that in a summer of late blight all around us, we were able to still have a tomato season. We hope that you have enjoyed these delightful fruits!

Basil

Assuming fall weather, this is the last of the basil—that is why I switched it with the parsley.

Farm News

It has been another week of wonderful help, and good people here at Greenspirit. I have been back and forth all week from the hospital where my dad is battling leukemia, so I don't actually have a good sense of what is happening here....but I thank all of you who are being flexible, understanding and helpful during this trying time. Your friendship is sustaining, thank you.

It seems that fall is arriving, the air feels different, the squash plants are dying back to reveal beautiful winter squash, onions are drying in the barn, and the washstand is starting to feel cool again.

We will have three more weeks of regular season after this week, then go directly to winter shares (which are sold out). If you have any questions about anything as we approach the end of the season, please feel free to email me.

Our last farm party is scheduled for October 10 at 5pm. We will have a hay ride, pumpkin pick and bonfire, weather permitting. We hope to see you there.

Take care and be well,

Jennifer
